I object to the proposed licence applications. Tennyson Rd and surrounding roads are a quiet haven in London for long-established residents and young families. The location promises to add unwanted noise pollution. Backing onto the cemetery means there are no buildings to diffuse or absorb the music and noise from a 100+ cover restaurant/bar. Licensing past midnight for this venue on multiple nights of the week runs counter to the quiet enjoyment of the neighbourhood. Rather than being able to listen to the birds in the cemetery (enjoyed not just by residents, but visitors to the green space as well), there is likely to be the constant drone of music and talking in to the small hours when locals will want to rest. I don't object to better quality restaurants in Kilburn/Queen's Park, but this is the wrong location, being opposite two already busy venues.
